Several studies have demonstrated that chronic ethanol consumption impairs the host's ability to respond to bacterial infections. The in vivo mechanisms remain unknown. In this study, human T cells (CEM, MT-4) were cultured in vitro and exposed to ethanol for 72 hr, which is equivalent to the exposure of a person of 40 kg to alcohol. Cells were also treated with synthetic bacterial lipopolysaccharide (LPS) to determine whether chronic ethanol consumption affects LPS-induced apoptosis. Treatment of cells with 10 microg/mL LPS induced apoptosis in CEM and MT-4 cells, and this level was reduced by 50% in the presence of 10 mM ethanol. Chronic ethanol treatment in vitro resulted in a decrease in viability, which was also associated with increased apoptosis. These data show that chronic ethanol consumption alters some immune cell functions. Beatles Tribute Fans Turn to U2 For Songs The Beatles may be dead, but a new breed of tribute band has taken their place among fans who wish to keep their Beatles memories alive. A recent story in the UK Telegraph has revealed that the tradition of Beatles tribute bands seems to be growing, even as the Fab Four prepare to receive their own star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. The idea of the tribute to the Fab Four is said to be flourishing among fans around the world and a U2-themed Beatles cover band, The Tuesdays, is enjoying more than rave reviews.
