1. Create a New Photoshop Project If you have not already opened Photoshop, click File New and then choose Photoshop from the menu that appears (see Figure 1-11). Photoshop launches and creates a new Photoshop document with an empty canvas for you to work on. Figure 1-11 Starting a new Photoshop project. 2. Add a New Layer In your new Photoshop project, you will add your first layer. To do this, click the Layers palette and click the New Layer icon at the bottom of the palette, as shown in Figure 1-12. Figure 1-12 Creating a new layer. When you add a layer, a thin black line appears in the Canvas to show you where the new layer is located (see Figure 1-13). 3. Add a Photo Click the New Layer icon again and add a new layer from your photos. The process of adding a photo is the same as adding a new layer, as shown in Figure 1-14. Open any of your photos in the source folder of your new Photoshop project and drag it over the canvas to add it. Figure 1-13 The layer is created. Figure 1-14 Selecting a photo and adding it to a new layer. 4. Repeat Steps 2–3 for Additional Layers Add additional layers to your new Photoshop project by following the steps just listed. You can organize and group layers easily so you can keep track of your composition and your work, which is often a beneficial thing when you have multiple layers of your design in play, as with a lot of web and graphic design work. 5. Duplicate Layers There is nothing wrong with adding a layer a lot, but after you have added the first three layers, it would be smart to make a backup copy of any layers you've added to the canvas. A good way to do this is by duplicating layers in the Layers palette, as shown in Figure 1-15. Once duplicated, you have a new, independent copy of the original layer. Figure 1-15 Duplicating a layer. If you have an entire photo you've created as a layer, you can use the Duplicate Top Layers option in the Layers palette (see Figure 1-16). When you duplicate the top layer, all layers

Chicago Public Schools is going to be shutting down its social media accounts, including the district's website, in a move to prevent student harassment and bullying. But exactly what types of comments — whether positive, negative or neutral — will be blocked is still being hammered out in CPS and the Chicago Public Schools (CPS), according to the Chicago Sun-Times. The decision was made by CPS CEO Forrest Claypool and is in line with the district's commitment to creating a more inclusive and positive environment for students. But some teachers are raising concerns that children will suffer. [CPS] is a microcosm of many American schools, with students who are increasingly ostracized for being different. If students are going to be banned from certain types of comments on social media platforms, the question is: What's next? Public shaming? Is this the beginning of a larger war on free speech and the basic idea of a democracy? This might be a turn for the worse in terms of social media as a whole. They have gone too far, and we've been snooping on kids for too long. This is censorship. Are teachers going to have to be vetted too? It seems to be a slippery slope. A decision like this doesn't allow for nuance or sensitivity. And just because students are harassing each other on Snapchat doesn't mean they're going to start shooting each other in school. Schools don't need to censor the Internet to protect these kids. But other school officials, including CPS Chief Diversity Officer Margaret Reid, say they are excited about the opportunity to give students tools to help them learn how to relate to people of different backgrounds. But she doesn't see students targeting certain races or religions and says she "can't imagine schools would be the first to censor people's beliefs or thoughts or say what they want to say." Claypool is also working on a plan to allow students to teach one another in online classrooms that are funded by the district. And the district will be creating a website where students can ask permission to use the district's Twitter account and their teacher's Twitter account for discussions. Despite the transition plans for social media accounts, the district's website will remain open.Q: Remove alpha channel from png in imagemagick I have a png image file, I use this command convert -alpha remove background.png I don't understand why, but it somehow replaces my original background.png with the
