Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a set of wrenches and, more particularly, to a set of wrenches that allow for greater access to critical parts of the engine. 2. Description of the Related Art It is often difficult to remove and replace spark plugs because the spark plug is typically located well behind the engine block, and it is difficult to access the plug without removing other engine components. Removal of other engine components may involve cutting screws or bolts that are used to attach other components. This not only requires tools, but may also require removal of the timing belt to permit access to the plug. Generally, spark plugs are replaced once a year and are cleaned to remove deposits that prevent the proper firing of the engine. Some larger engines have spark plug sockets located on one or both sides of the engine, and the engine has a plug for each spark plug. Different wrenches are used to remove and replace each spark plug. These wrenches are located by a user above the socket and below the plug, and the wrenches that are used for the different sockets and plugs are therefore different. This does not allow the user to select a particular socket and plug without the user using a different tool and performing additional steps in the process to remove and replace the socket and plug. This invention relates to television signal receivers and more particularly to methods and apparatus for performing frame synchronizing operations in television receivers. One of the most important elements of television broadcasting is frame synchronization. Frame synchronization is the process of establishing the timing of the beginning of each television frame. Two techniques are used by receivers to achieve frame synchronization. One technique is referred to as "center channel synchronism" and requires that the receiver have a reference channel signal whose frequency is at or near the midpoint between the vertical and horizontal scan frequencies. A technique that uses center channel synchronization is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 3,674,500 to
