Inhibition of human serum chymase and trypsin on the superoxide generation of neutrophils and mast cell degranulation in cell-free systems. To investigate the effects of human serum chymase and trypsin on superoxide anion (O₂⁻) generation by human neutrophils and degranulation of mast cells. O₂⁻ generation was measured using a cytochrome c reduction assay, and degranulation was measured by the release of beta-hexosaminidase. Chymase had little effect on O₂⁻ generation by human neutrophils. Trypsin, however, significantly decreased the generation of O₂⁻ by neutrophils, while inhibiting the degranulation of mast cells, even when the alpha-trypsin was not present in the supernatant. Human serum trypsin and chymase may be responsible for the effects of human sera on the anti-microbial activity and inflammatory reactions, respectively. The chymase and trypsin might exhibit unique pharmacological properties.

Cable TV Services Basics:Cable TV; Cable TV offers television programming, made with an antenna, to receive pay television. It differs from terrestrial television in that it uses a coaxial cable to connect the television set to a local cable television provider. A local cable television provider is usually an area cable company or telecom company which provides cable and/or phone services. Cable is usually less expensive than broadcast TV because the programming is generated by a single source and rather than being a network of stations many of which have to be added together the programming for cable is simply added together. Cable TV providers therefore only need one transmission tower to transmit the programming to the viewer. The transmitters are usually located at the top of tall antennas or poles. The programming they transmit may be public access, instructional programming or a mixture of the two. Advantages:The main advantage is that one provider provides the programming for the entire area. They will add local content for local companies and events. The quality of cable television is also much better than broadcast television. The technology for Cable TV is considered to be very reliable and has virtually no technical problems. Disadvantages:The main disadvantage is that one provider is in charge of all the programming for all the subscribers in that area. This means that the service can become expensive and you

Muggers are given cards that help them spot a potential victim. BBC News London Correspondent Matt Danzico spent time on a south London street with the mugs. Produced by Katie Trant.
