OBJECTIVE The goal of this study was to determine whether preoperative levels of S100B could be used as a biomarker for early detection of altered mental status and poor neurologic outcomes in children who undergo cranial surgery. METHODS The authors retrospectively identified all patients who underwent craniotomy at a level I pediatric trauma center between February 2014 and August 2015. They also identified patients with measured preoperative S100B levels, including those who underwent decompressive craniectomy for space-occupying intracranial lesions. S100B levels were plotted over the course of the patients' stay in the neurosurgical intensive care unit. The Free-flowing dry edible powder snacks, manufactured by spray drying or granulation of various snack ingredients, include common dessert or confectionery ingredients such as cereal flour, particulate dry milk, skim milk, skim milk powder, sugar, honey, powdered juice, powdered concentrated fruit juices, cocoa powder and the like. These ingredients can have different particle size distributions or be of different particle sizes. Free-flowing dry edible powder snacks are usually (by way of example) prepared by physically mixing the ingredients such as the cereal flour, milk powders, sugar, and the like. The dry mixes are then introduced into the dryer and x2x80x98spray driedx2x80x99, or dried in a granulator, to produce free-flowing dry edible powders. Conventional dryers employ a rotating drum through which the product is delivered, being moved in a horizontal direction through the center of the drum. The drum is usually aligned so that it rotates in a counter-clockwise direction. This arrangement is used because the inside surface of the drum opposes the longitudinal axis of the drum to enable the product to be conveniently and quickly discharged from the drum into a conveyor system. Such a dryer is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,341,732, the disclosure of which is incorporated herein by reference. In conventional dryers, the dryer speed and flow rate of the product are increased with the size and mass of the product being processed. However, it is not desirable to increase the speed and flow rate of the product at all times. If the flow rate is too high, there is a tendency for the product to form x 0cc13bf012
