Stikir is a small, quirky platformer with a colour palette that reminds me of the glorious EGA days. It's a self-contained single player experience with one goal: survival. Survival of the player. Survival of the race. This, my friends, is how game design should be. [Gameplay] The player can only move towards the left and right. Keys are scarce, so it's up to the player to make the best use of the obstacle course that's provided, and find a creative solution to the problems that are thrown at them. [Story] What is a bunnyrace if not a tale of prejudice and difference? Our heroes have arrived on Earth (well, not literally) and find themselves being mistaken for bugs by the technologically superior humans. The player is split into two races, and serves as the catalyst for overcoming prejudice, getting along and getting along better. [Graphics] Here are some images of the same scene rendered in different colours; Green is the player's race, they run towards the left hand side. Blue is the enemy race, they run towards the right hand side. Red is the ground, which in this case, is a maze. The cyan colour is the wall, which can be climbed to move and search for keys. The other colours, the beige, is the grass, which can be climbed to get onto platforms, and the brown is the fire, which can be used to destroy blocks. [Remastered Edition] This is a special edition of Stikir that contains two difficulty modes, five playable characters, and extra game elements. *Difficulty modes -Classic Mode: Easier than the Remaster Edition version. -Experimental Mode: Harder than the Remaster Edition version. *Characters -Tricky, a manipulative girl who enjoys giving you a hard time. -Mighty, a horn-headed warrior. -Eternal, a flintlock heavy-gunner. -Tinker, a technologically advanced punk that enjoys blowing things up. -Witch, a mean-spirited sorceress that turns people into spiky puddings. -Sheena, an aerobatics enthusiast. -Duke, a thief prone to waxing lyrical. -Dante, a red-clad rebel with a fondness for explosives. *Extra Game Elements -The Magic Mirror -A dash-

Play a game. Play a story. Play a mystery. Stikir follows a simple game design paradigm - you see a room, you play a story. The game is played from a first person perspective. You need to find your way through the story. At the same time, there is a very minimalist layout to keep the focus on the content and the story. Simply, you must play a short story. Features Randomly generated rooms - Each room has a different layout, either procedurally generated or hand crafted. There are no pre-defined rooms! Enjoyable gameplay and fluid movement - as our hero, moving around and solving puzzles is fun and challenging. Just play for a bit to see how the story ends! We want to tell cool stories, whether you're a games player or not. You just play, watch and have fun! Genomewide evolutionary analysis of the genus Blattabacterium using conserved single-copy genes and concatenated sequences. We performed a cross-species genomic comparison and showed that there was a significant evolution of the genus Blattabacterium among four rod-shaped bacterium species: B. abortus, B. bronchiseptica, B. petrii, and B. rodentium. This was supported by the sequence identity range in conserved genes and the concatenated multiple alignment analysis. We concluded that B. abortus was more closely related to B. bronchiseptica than to B. petrii and B. rodentium, and that B. petrii and B. rodentium were more closely related than B. bronchiseptica and B.
