Possible Duplicate: Is there a default conversion from float to bool in C++? The title says it all. I was watching a documentary about the programming language C++ recently and they were talking about how it's a bit like an algebra. Take this for example: $if(5/2 > 0)$ This will automatically be converted to a bool. The $5/2$ part is evaluated first. If it produces a number greater than 0, the whole thing evaluates to true. But what I don't get is, if $5/2$ was int rather than float, and int is an integer type, I don't get why it would automatically convert $5/2$ to bool. To me it makes more sense if it was int/int because $5/2$ returns an int. So what's going on behind the scenes and how does it work?
