Sign up using the form below and we'll send you a link to download PRO-ATC/X for FREE today!After more than a year of awaiting and listening to his departure, Winnipeg Jets fans have finally had a chance to say goodbye to their captain Andrew Ladd, who announced his retirement from the game today. Ladd has decided to hang up his skates this coming season and move on from the game that has been his entire career, which has been an amazing ride throughout his career. The silver lining for Jets fans is that we can finally move on to the next captain in the club. No one has stepped up and grabbed the chance to wear the "C" yet, but the captaincy has been up for grabs since the start of camp. There's still quite a few candidates, so it's going to be an interesting few months. Here's a look at eight guys you can expect to see wearing the "C" this season: 1. Blake Wheeler Wheeler's been the captain of the team since the day he arrived. He's been the face of the team since, and he's led the team in a lot of big situations. He started the "Wheeler's goal in the playoffs" craze, and it still happens. When he was sent to the AHL when the team initially made the season long playoffs, there was a lot of speculation on whether or not he would become the new captain. But it wouldn't be Wheeler unless it was special. The captain who graces the covers of Jets magazines and has been the face of the team for over a decade is the one we call Captain Blake. 2. Evander Kane The last time Kane was a fixture on the second line on a team that was battling for the playoffs was in 2009-10. This kid has come a long way since then, and the time is right for him to take the mantle of captain. While he's playing for the other team, we'll remember him for what he did when he was one of our own. Kane's always been an excellent playmaker with the

The relationship of cigarette smoking to education and work status, and to co-morbidity among persons with diabetes. This study examines the relative importance of education and work status and of co-morbidity among diabetic patients. We developed a classification tree model to determine how these variables affect each other. The data were derived from a cross-sectional study of 2,558 diabetic patients in Houston, Texas, who were members of the Blue Cross and Blue Shield Association. Over half the sample were black, and nearly half were women. The dependent variables were self-reported tobacco use, years of education, and employment status. Our results show that although education has an overriding effect on smoking among all classes of diabetic patients, smoking is more likely to be a function of social class among those without jobs and education. Among the 1,273 diabetics with jobs, there is an association between work status and education. In other words, the likelihood of smoking is greatest among the least educated and lowest among the best educated. A breakdown of this relationship to levels of education reveals that there is a wide range of prevalence of smoking among diabetics with different levels of education, but that the most educated diabetics have the highest prevalence.

Endocrine-disrupting effects of certain pesticide formulations on wild boar (Sus scrofa) and domestic swine (Sus domesticus) in a multi-route screening program. This study investigated the individual and combined effects of seven pesticide formulations commonly used in North-Central and North-Western Europe for fattening domestic swine on hormonal and reproductive endpoints in wild boar (Sus scrofa). To detect endocrine-disrupting effects in wild boar, pregnant and non-pregnant sub-adults (approximately 1-year old) were used. Four formulations were administered orally over two consecutive days at a single dose of 20 mg active substance (AS)/kg body weight. One further formulation, consisting of 20 mg AS/kg body weight and 1000 mg lindane/kg body weight, was administered orally on two consecutive days. The dichlorvos formulation was taken internally by force-feeding the animals with a syringe, while the two-in-one suspension was given by oral ingestion.
