It is the object of the present invention to provide a method of dialysis treatment to more effectively remove toxic metals and anions from the body of the patient during dialysis treatment, wherein a metal or anion removing agent is directed against the aqueous flows of a patient's blood during treatment and wherein a copper sorbent is added to the patient's blood prior to, during, and following the dialysis treatment. Dialysis, by which is meant the treatment of blood by artificial means, is well known in the field of medicine. Blood is removed from the body of a patient and cleansed of toxic components which would otherwise tend to prevent the patient's system from functioning properly. Dialysis is typically conducted between two blood-contacting pieces of equipment, generally known as an "artificial kidney", which contains a first set of filters and a dialyzing solution. The dialyzing solution is d0c515b9f4
