stores now for $49.99. ----- At the time of this review, we have not seen the new mouse and keyboard controls in action. However, to our knowledge, players of the PC version and PC support will receive the following improvements: Intuitive Controls and Brand New Gameplay: As with the original PC version, the game is very easy to pick up and play. A left click on anything selects it. Left clicking on a unit or the build window will build that thing. Tapping left click moves the cursor. Tapping right click opens a new window that gives you quick access to your units, cities, and diplomacy options. Tapping right click brings up your unit list in a separate window. As long as the game is in a city view (i.e. when you are flying above a city) you have a center map that you can zoom in and out of. Tapping and holding left click brings up the city view. It's all very intuitive. ----- Below is a video about the motion-plus mouse and keyboard controls in the game. ----- Cities in depth: The new city view mode allows you to truly take an eagle eye view of the game. As you fly over the map, the city icons light up and you have access to the city map. When you zoom in, your camera view moves in to the center of the city. City view mode also introduces a new, semi-delegated control scheme. One must assign focus and auxiliary focus to any city.

If the city is under attack, you can assign focus to it so that enemy troops move towards it. If you assign auxiliary focus to a city, you can activate building upgrades for the city at any time. It is possible for two cities
