Here is more info about this software:.Bayer's Amflora: Monsanto's New Sales Machine? In Mexico, Monsanto's trade name Amflora (ah-flah-rah) can be seen adorning the tops of plastic bags, cans, even the lid of a metal cash box. Amflora grew from seed to bumper crop in Monsanto's factory in Casas Grandes, Mexico, but it is hardly an agricultural product. It is the commercial name for glyphosate, the herbicide used on Amflora to kill unwanted plants. Its growth represents not only a commitment to Roundup, but also to the recent trend toward industrialization of agriculture. The industrialization of agriculture is nothing new, but glyphosate and other powerful herbicides have played a crucial role in this shift from conventional to industrial agriculture. Industrial agriculture has grown from the seed trade. Seed companies dominate the business of selling crops from seed to final sale. Conventional farmers sell their crops after the crop is harvested, while industrial farmers can continue to harvest crops long after they have been sold. This advantage has given seed companies a competitive edge. As seed companies have gained in power they have increasingly turned to influencing government policy to ensure that conventional farming, which relies heavily on herbicides, loses the competitive edge afforded to industrial farmers. In the United States, the use of glyphosate, the main ingredient in Roundup and the key ingredient in Roundup Ready soybeans and corn seeds, skyrocketed from just 4.6 million pounds in 2001 to more than 14 million in 2012. Over this same period, the use of Roundup Ready crops increased from less than 6 million acres to more than 30 million acres, a fourfold increase. In Mexico, farmers began adopting the glyphosate-laden Roundup Ready soy and corn seeds in the 1990s, but when
