PSD files can be found in most image hosting sites on the web. Photoshop = a program used to manipulate an image
Rasterized = an image made from squares of colored dots or pixels Link = a hypertext link used to connect related information
Image = a set of pixels Pixels = two-dimensional dots, each representing a single color or tone. A 2D array of pixels can be displayed as a single 2D image or in a 3D environment. 1.5.1. Photoshop Layers Photoshop uses layers to layer elements onto images. Each layer is a container for multiple shapes, effects and filters. You can use layers to separate different elements or effects. Layers give you complete control over your images by using layers to separate different elements and effects. By using Photoshop's layer feature, you can stack elements on top of each other to create complex, layered compositions. Each layer is visible and editable. You can view and hide layers and you can edit the contents of layers. Each layer has a unique name and a unique color. You can even edit the colors of individual layers. The different layer colors make it easy to know the difference between different layers. COPY LAYERS SHEET LAYER Layered Pixel Editing Don't confuse layers with transparency. Layers let you edit, manipulate, and combine elements, while transparency lets you see the elements on the layer below or behind the one you are working on. Create or re-arrange layers with the Layers panel; add new layers with the + icon in the Canvas. LAYER_ACCEPT, Layer_Reject - Layers dialog box The Layers panel can be used to get an overview of all of the layers and to move, copy, and delete individual layers. To move a layer, select it in the Layers panel. Then click the Move tool and use the Left or Right Arrow keys to move a layer. The layer moves with the cursor and snaps to the new position. To copy a layer, select it in the Layers panel. Then click the Copy tool and use the Left or Right Arrow keys to move the layer. The layer stays in the location that it is copied from. To delete a layer, select it in the Layers panel. Then click the Finding the right dog to fit into your family is important. It's also a big decision. Because you're going to be spending a lot of time with your pooch. Dogs are human's best companions, they make us happy, safe and relaxed. That is why they deserve special treatment. How to Choose the Right Home Choosing the right home is one of the most important aspects of owning a dog. Of course, your own home will be your priority. Dogs need a safe, secure, warm and friendly environment. And a home that is not too large for them. And if your home is in a very rural setting, you may need to chose the right dog that will be happy living in a city, or at least in the suburbs. However, it's also important to chose your home wisely. You can't choose the wrong thing, you'll end up being a lonely dog owner. Choosing Your Dog Can you give me some guidance? You're confused, you're worried, and you have a lot of questions. I'm asking if you can't find the right place for your dog. How can you choose your dog, and your new home? You need to ask yourself some questions. Do you have the financial ability to buy a dog? Do you know how long will he live? Do you know how he'll live with you, how he will be with other animals? Do you know if your friends and family will like him? Can you afford to buy him everything he needs? Can you afford to pay for the veterinary care if your dog needs it? Finally, do you know your dog, or where he came from? Choosing the Right Dog This is one of the hardest decisions you'll ever have to make. However, you will need to be very careful, and do your best to get everything right. You want to choose a dog that will be loyal, friendly, and cheerful. If your dog gets angry, he may not be right for you. You need to be the right person for him, and he has to feel comfortable with you. Your dog is your best friend. Dogs are a lot of work, you need to learn a lot of things. It's not always easy to figure out if you're doing it right. Because dogs are so sensitive, and because they have their own personalities, it's easy for them to become frustrated.
