If you've been following the news lately, you've probably heard about cryptocurrency Bitcoin rising in value, especially since last week's major update by one of its biggest investors. If you haven't heard, Bitcoin is still an "investment opportunity", but one that might have a huge downside risk, as the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) is now considering whether or not to investigate the digital currency. Many of you have probably heard the term "Bitcoin" before, but very few of you realize that "Bitcoin" is the brand name, and "Blockchain" is what makes Bitcoin/cryptocurrencies/decentralized currency work. In this article, I'd like to clarify the difference between the two, and explain how both blockchain and Bitcoin work. The Bitcoin Network: With Blockchain Technology, What is it? To understand Bitcoin, it's first important to understand how the Bitcoin Network works. With Bitcoin, the Bitcoin Network is how Bitcoin works as a decentralized currency system. Bitcoin users, or "miners", are incentivized to use their computers to do certain "work" to validate the payments. The work performed by these miners is quite complex, and requires specialized equipment. The result of this work is a "block", which gets put into a "blockchain". The blockchain is a massive database (apparently bigger than the entire Internet) that keeps track of all the digital currency transactions that take place. To put it another way, the Bitcoin Blockchain is a distributed ledger that allows you to send Bitcoin payments from one person to another - 0cc13bf012

I read today in the chat room that four edits had been done by BESW, the initial author of the post; the approved edits have the timestamps 2018-11-21T17:37:33Z However, all of the content has been removed. How should we handle this? Should the original post be deleted? Do we still want to keep it for search purposes? I did not want to just make a comment but the SO team said it was really not to go against the post, so I thought about this. A: I tend to favour leave the post as is. As the post is already old (7 years), I figure that anybody visiting the search results would have difficulty finding the post. It's basically a duplicate. If BESW decides to remove the post and replace with their original, that's their prerogative. But if the post is historic in nature and brings contributions, I'd rather keep it in place. # Copyright (C) 2012 Google Inc.
