In general, when an input signal is amplified by an amplifier circuit, the input signal is amplified by different gains depending on the level of the input signal. However, in order to decrease the consumption power, the amplifier circuit is generally operated with a fixed gain. For this reason, when an input signal is amplified by the amplifier circuit with a fixed gain, the output signal always has an unnecessarily high level. Therefore, in general, it is necessary to perform a signal level adjustment. In the case of a video signal processing apparatus, a field number and the number of output lines are altered by a function of the apparatus, and hence the signal level is generally adjusted in accordance with the number of output lines. Since the video signal processing apparatus usually has a multi-output structure, the apparatus generally includes a plurality of video signal output lines. Therefore, when the number of output lines is changed, the signal level must be adjusted in accordance with the number of output lines. FIG. 1 shows a conventional level setting circuit for use with a video signal processing apparatus. In the circuit, the following equation (1) holds.  $P_{out} = (P_{in}/G) * V_{in}^{sup.2}$ . (1) In this equation,  $P_{out}$  is the output signal,  $P_{in}$  is the input signal,  $V_{in}$  is the input voltage and  $G$  is the variable gain. When the gain is varied, the signal level is varied as shown in FIG. 2. In the figure, the signal level is inversely  $6d1f23a050$
