Work on Windows .Published Started Photographer Edited Published Created Kokoro is a train pulling a circle of 23 people aboard. It was designed by Japanese artist Shinsuke Shimada, and it opened in 1998 in the Mori Art Museum in Roppongi, Tokyo. The animatronic train is covered with 23 monitors, where each screen is covered with a giant human heart, although many are currently inoperable or broken. The train moves under the control of a computer and motor. It was built after 11 years of planning, but it is still in operation today. By the way, the total number of persons within the train is also 23, as in "The Son of God" by Michelangelo. Kokoro is operated by the Tokyo Metropolitan Government and Tokyo Electric Power Co., and it is taken for around 2,500 - 3,000,000 persons a year. It is located within a large circular structure. The train runs for around seven minutes during the day time, and it can be viewed for only 30 seconds when it comes into the station. After you end the viewing period, a bell rings. It indicates that one of the screens will turn on and that the train will begin moving. If you'd like to know more about Shinsuke Shimada, check out his website here.
