Kwaliteitsmanagement.Q: How to monitor new process with Node.js I've created a little Node.js application that checks a running Minecraft server for changes and if one happens, I then execute a function (different for each change) I'm running the thing on Windows with Windows Service (yep, I know bad idea) There's no problem checking for the changes, and executing the right function to update the database (I'm using a google app engine backend), but I want to be able to get some kind of notification that a change has occurred for the server, so I can update the database. My initial idea was to use a File Monitor, but that's obviously not the best way to go about it. Any ideas? A: I ended up just using the console.log, and saving it to a file to see if there were any changes. If there were changes I opened the file in a text editor and updated it, in the event it wasn't a change I just left the console.log unchanged.

Palladium-catalyzed cross-coupling of aryl iodides with aryl sulfonyl chlorides: synthesis of diaryl sulfones. Aryl sulfones can be conveniently obtained in good to excellent yields via a novel Pd-catalyzed cross-coupling between aryl iodides and aryl sulfonyl chlorides. The reaction proceeds in a highly regioselective manner by the formation of an intermediate vinyl sulfone, which is the thioether analog of the aforementioned C-S bond. This approach circumvents 6d1f23a050
