Q: How do I set the path of the CIniFile to a load time dependent directory using this function? I'm using this function to load settings from a string using INI files in C++: // Loads settings from a string with the given file name to the given iniDirectory // OR iniPath to use the given path if INI_PATH is empty // Example: LoadSettings("settings", "Game.ini", "iniPath/settings.ini") // or LoadSettings("settings", "iniPath/settings.ini") // or LoadSettings("settings", "iniPath") // All of these calls will be treated the same way, except the first argument // will be the setting name and the second argument will be where the settings are loaded from // if they are loaded from a directory (i.e..ini file) void LoadSettings(std::string setting_name, std::string iniPath, std::string iniDirectory = ""); It's working great and I use it in my applications but I have one problem with it. I could change the INI path depending on the platform I'm running on, but not the INI filename. I know that I can use the "XML" solution: config.xml resources.pak resources.resx But since I'm using Win32 and I can't use a XML file I need to use INI files. What I want to know is if there's a way to get the current directory (the "directory" I use in the function above), so I can set the path depending on it. Like: std::string setting_path = "../settings/User.ini"; std::string setting_ini_path = "../settings"
