looking.Q: Storing tempfile results I have a custom form that uses TempFile() to store the results of a ckeditor field. The problem I am having is that when I call $form_state['storage']['result'] = TempFile(); all the data is lost on form submit. I have looked at the predefined variables that can be saved and they either don't store in the db. (like $form_state['storage']['multiple']) or they don't save the tempfile contents. (like $form_state['storage']['private']) Is there anyway to store the TempFile() contents on a multidimension array like the predefined variables?

$form_state = new stdClass;
$form_state->storage = new stdClass; $form_state->storage->multiple = $multiple; $fo rm_state->storage->private = $private;

$form_state->storage->result = TempFile(); A: $form_state['storage']['result'] = TempFile(); You should add the TempFile() result to the form_state because if you don't it just means your TempFile() will do nothing and you should think about what you want to do with this. Example: function submitForm($form_state) { // Do the stuff that I need to do here $form_state->storage->result = TempFile(); //... } This will actually make the result available to the form, and if you try and access it like: $test = $form_state['storage']['result']; echo $test; It will echo the contents of the TempFile(). If you really want to access the result, when you do this: $test = $form_st ate['storage']['result']; $ 6d1f23a050
