Source: Michigan voters still to be sought Recent Michigan stories of note December 17, 2012 |by John Sell, Detroit Free Press Jill Sexton, left, with her husband, Mike, cheers for President Barack Obama during a 2012 event at Ben Bradlee Restaurant & Café in downtown Detroit. Sexton had been receiving dental care at the clinic and was waiting for her 3-year-old daughter, Annabelle, to be picked up by her father from school. The family members were at a vigil for fallen Officer Sean Moore, killed in a shootout Nov. 4 with his wife's family in Detroit. TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. — An effort to increase the number of minority voters in Michigan appears dead. The state House and Senate have ended the work that created a 2.8% Increase in minority voters, and are now pursuing separate plans that would get minorities and young people to register and vote. The House plan is a $4.9 million plan that would encourage young people to register and vote in their home communities by setting up a community outreach office in every community college, under the guise of a "college fair." The bill does not define which communities qualify as "home
