The most common AISI standard steel grades used in civil construction consist of 15% to 27% chromium and 1% to 5% niobium. These grades are available in two different hardening treatments: Carbon treatment and Nitrogen treatment. Carbon treatment has greater tensile strength than Nitrogen treatment. Carbon steel is the standard for many military and construction applications. Carbon steel is also the standard for high carbon steels. When gasoline engines, which were the primary source of energy in vehicles, were invented, automobile makers discovered that they needed a steel that could withstand the high temperatures and pressures of the combustion process. With the invention of the internal combustion engine, the automobile was transformed from a horse-drawn carriage into a modern marvel. Since the automobile still relies on the combustion process, many automobile manufacturers use steel to manufacture the large majority of their components. The most basic form of steel is steels that have a composition of carbon, nitrogen, silicon, and manganese. To make a steel that is suitable for automobiles, three basic requirements have to be met. The first requirement is to withstand the high temperature that exists during
