One of the most prevalent applications of nuclear imaging technology is to examine the distribution of a tracer in the body, such as a radioactive drug, by using a positron emission tomography (PET) device. PET technology is currently being used to evaluate the functional status and physiology of various parts of the body. Although PET technology has also been applied to a variety of other medical fields, its primary application is for diagnosing diseases. The basic principles of PET involve placing the patient inside the tomograph, injecting a radiopharmaceutical into the patient, and then measuring the radiation emanating from the body after the radiation

Q: Absolute value function and proof I'm reading through my book right now and I came across this, Absolute value $|x| = \max\{x, -x\}$ I never really learned about this concept and was wondering how to prove it and some applications of it? A:

$$\max\{x, -x\} = \begin{cases} x & \text{if } x \geq 0 \\ -x & \text{if } x < 0 \end{cases}$$
