Bowerice had been an important landmark in the history of football in Britain. Impact of pathology and clinical features on surgical outcomes for patients with superficial esophageal squamous cell carcinoma undergoing Ivor-Lewis esophagectomy. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the pathologic and clinical characteristics of patients with superficial esophageal squamous cell carcinoma (SESCC) and their impact on surgical outcomes. Patients who underwent Ivor-Lewis esophagectomy for SESCO between January 2003 and December 2010 were reviewed. One hundred and seventy-eight patients were enrolled. Mean age was  $63.3 \pm 8.3$  years. The tumor depth of invasion was T1 in 41 (23%) patients, T2 in 120 (67.6%), and T3 in 17 (9.4%). The tumor location was upper in 128 (72%) patients, middle in 38 (21.3%), and lower in 12 (6.7%). The mean operation time was  $467 \pm 193$  minutes and the mean estimated blood loss was  $2647 \pm 1629$  mL. The mean lymph node count was  $30 \pm 14$  (range: 0 to 82). The major complication rate was 28%, and the major mortality rate was 5.6%. Multivariate analysis revealed that age and tumor location were independent risk factors for major complications. The length of hospital stay was not associated with any risk factors except for smoking. Patients with T2 or lower disease seem to have a lower major complication rate than those with T3. Smokers tend to develop major complications and have a longer hospital stay than never-smokers. Cancer Cell-Induced Chondrogenic Differentiation of Mesenchymal Stem Cells in the Presence of Activated Tumor Necrosis Factor-Related Apoptosis-Inducing Ligand Signaling Pathway. Mesenchymal stem cells (MSCs) are multipotent cells with the potential to differentiate into a variety of cell types, and have received much attention for their potential use in regenerative medicine. One of the challenges for the practical application of MSCs is to obtain MSCs with an active phenotype. Thus, in this study, we examined whether MSC differentiation could be enhanced using a cancer
