The disease cycle is completed only in fresh water and is not transmissible. Ichthyophthirius is most commonly associated with a seasonal cycle of dermatitis in fish and humans, and river blindness in riverine Africa. Ichthyophthirius is most commonly diagnosed by examining the gills or fins for the characteristic white bodies. A thorough and meticulous skin examination is indicated if ichthyophthirius dermatitis is suspected in any patient.This study focuses on the receptor for heparin-containing growth factors, and on the structure, regulation and mechanism of action of this receptor. Heparin has been shown to stimulate the proliferation of some cells that lack heparan sulfate, and it may therefore be involved in the induction of cellular proliferation by growth factors. This hypothesis will be investigated. A number of heparin-binding proteins with mitogenic activity have been isolated, and evidence has been obtained for receptors for some of these proteins in cultured cells. The structure and mechanism of action of these receptors c6a93da74d
