Effect of Elevating Elevations in the Tibet Plateau on the Gravity Field. The superposition and redistribution of disturbances in the upper plate on the gravity field in the low-latitude region were analyzed in this study. The results showed that the increases in elevations of Tibetan Plateau and the Central Asian lakes caused significant disturbances of the gravity field in the low latitudes, which were higher than the estimated standard deviations. Disturbances of the gravity field caused by the rising of the Tibetan Plateau were concentrated in the middle and high latitudes at low elevation levels and had local maximum values when the elevations of the Tibetan Plateau reached 4,800 m.

The local maximum values of gravity disturbance resulted from the height of Tibetan Plateau ranged from 1,800 to 3,200 m. The gravity disturbance was slightly localized when the elevations of the Central Asian lakes reached 300 m. When the elevations of the Tibetan Plateau increased to 4,800 m, the gravity disturbance was more or less uniform in the low latitudes. the spirit of the season; half-and-half fabric and dark colored cover, soft and light.
