If you see holes on your flooring, this usually means that the floor has been installed over a worn, old floor joist. The wearing of the floor by people walking on it or loading a roller- or hand-truck over it cause the joists to move in and out of the sub floor, moving the joists in a diagonal fashion, causing the whole floor to move with them. In an extreme case, a regular crack may eventually turn into a structural crack and may need to be professionally fixed. An example of a similar tile replacement job could be a bad grout line between tiles. A grout is a material used to fill the spaces in between the tiles in order to create a smooth surface. Since grout is a porous material, an open grout line can cause dampness to permeate into the wall. This is where grout sealer comes in handy as a plaster-based sealing agent that prevents water from entering from the grout area into the wall. Nowadays, modern houses are built with high-quality materials and construction that can withstand the effect of the climate, so there is a very little chance that the wall, and soil acids that eat away at the mortar. If the problem is ignored, it may eventually cause plastering and structural damage.
