finally despite its problems, tales from earthsea is actually a pretty decent movie. to get some perspective on the strengths and weakness of the film, i wrote a brief (part i , part ii) comparison with eragon, one of the highest rated anime ever produced by studio ghibli. the fansubs subtitles for this are basically perfect. being able to select subtitles is great. it saves money on dvds. it gives the hearing-impaired easier access. and as a bonus, there's no lag. the subtitles are just subtitles, nothing more. they don't go "game over" when the cell phone is talking to your ear. subtitles are not just about being able to select subs when you buy a dvd. they are also about being able to access dvd's in places that do not have internet access. i wanted to listen to my anime favorites in japan when i was on vacation, but i couldn't because of distance. i could download maid-san. but the subs were awful. thankfully, datozone came through and made my first purchase with their subtv series. i am big fan of maid-san and even though it is easy to find fansubs, if i go to a place without internet access, i want to be able to listen to the original. with subtv, i can listen to the dvd in an open space while i am enjoying my vacation. thats something you dont get with fansubs. but for that to happen, i have to buy, and i have to buy that way i can access subtitles. this is why i bought the bluray from bandai. i could watch the dub, switch to japanese audio with the subtitles, and listen to my anime in japan. what's more, the subtitles were not just-oh, wait, did i mention the list of music isn't even in english? as if this weren't bad enough, bandai did a crap job editing the subs. with the fansubs, especially the more recent ones, you can skip through the junk and get to the subs themselves. i have a feeling that this was the case with bandai as well, as i watched their subs last week. they are a decent speed and i could understand the dialog, but they had a stream of english text going across the screen. more than once, i saw lines like "in earthland, earthlings look down on the animals they eat" despite me selecting the japanese audio with only the subs. that went on for more than a minute. is this a joke? like, this is a part of the bandai release? because it was definitely not intentional and i am guessing thats why i saw the text in the first place.

it's just disappointing to see that dvds can handle all the different audio and video capabilities that have been necessary to get the fansubs out. if fansubs were the only thing needed to make a movie, then the dvds would be a whole lot cheaper. that's what fansubs are. that's why they're on dvds, because that's what fansubs are for. the timing's right. it's been almost six years since the last lot of ghibli images were released (they were released a year ago). there's been far more ghibli material lately, all of it high quality and well documented, than there was in the six years before that. it's good times for the ghibli revival. even more impressive was the way the movie made its mark on western audiences, who generally don't watch anime, and the fact that it was an action-adventure - story driven - anime which made the leap to the west. spirited away is about a 9 year-old girl named chihiro who gets swept away on a weird train called the "sen to chihiro no ki." after traveling on the train for many hours, they arrive at a village inhabited by oddos called the ohtsubo clan and chihiro is left at a orphanage. chihiro is captured by haku, a little imp who is the ohtsubo's servant. in the episode, he is shown to be very helpful to chihiro as he cooks her food, entertains her and does chores. haku is the only friend chihiro has. while in the train, chihiro watches the earth pass by. haku explains that the tunnel is known as the spirited away, and that the spirits of those who have passed through it have an opportunity to find freedom. chihiro, on the advice of haku, enters the tunnel and when she emerges, she sees that she is now in a different world that is "clean and beautiful" and populated by cute animals. the guardian of the area, a dragon, ignores chihiro and she decides to explore her new surroundings. in the process of exploring, she stumbles upon the gates of another world, called the western world. it is the world that she has always imagined but had never actually seen. in the western world, chihiro discovers a "gold shop" where she buys things with the money she brought with her. this newfound world is where chihiro is to live for the rest of her life. 5ec8ef588b
