
Total War Rome II Rise Of The Republic-CODEX Cheat Engine [REPACK]

Also, I think that my views about cheating in computer games are similar to views about cheating in sports. Unlike cheating in computer games, cheating in sports is almost entirely morally and intellectually bankrupt. For some reason, people have this bizarre notion that cheating in sports is fine, even though it generally just means an athlete isn't playing his best game, something that happens all the time anyway. Just like the existence proof of mechanical and chemical cheating in sports, the existence proof of cheating in computer games points to a much bigger problem, which is cheating in other fields. For example, consider the recent phenomenon of university professors cheating on exams. Usually the only reason to cheat is to not play your best game and still do ok. But in the modern context, the principle of cheating isn't to play the best game possible, but to win at all costs. Most people would consider cheating in university exams morally bankrupt, but they're actively ok with cheating in business, politics, and in the military. And just in case you do add cheat codes for even more resources than you already got, I suppose you'd need to make the cheat a priority game scenario, since resources don't need to be stationary—they don't even need to be consistent. And from a game designer's standpoint, it should be a big deal to make a rare scenario like a cheat. (Also, I think there would be a limit to what kind of cheat you could make in terms of actually changing the game— for example you couldn't just run the game as an AI on one of your PCs and start cheating with it, because that would just be running an AI on one of your PCs that isn't playing as you) The reason I think making a priority game scenario like a cheat should be a big deal is that it's an awesome way to advertise your game.
