The Guild 3 is a free to play game. So you can play the game for free and you can also compete in game competitions. All of them have prizes. To win a prize, it's not necessary to spend money but you will need to provide proof of purchase. This can be done with the in-game system if your account has a price tag or with the beta account creation if you are using the current (current=0.3) beta account creation. There are 3 types of competitions: 1. The Guild 3 Webmaster Competition. This competition is available after you have created a guild. You need to invite members to your guild to add to the clan. You will win the prize if the clan reaches the required amount of members to compete. This is a competition for alpha-testers who want to evaluate the Webmaster system and extend its features. If you are interested in being a webmaster please e-mail the Guild 3 team at guild3@theguild3.com. 2. The Guild 3 Release Competition. This competition is available with the current beta version. You will be given 5 challenges to complete. With each completed challenge you will add a number to your account. When you reach 10 challenges you will be invited to the Release Tournament. The winner of the tournament will get a prize. If you are interested in being a release tester please e-mail the Guild 3 team at guild3@theguild3.com. 3. The Guild 3 Webmaster Beta Competition. This is available with the previous version, 0.2. You will be given a small amount of challenges (e.g. 1-2). Each completed challenge will add a number to your account. When you reach 5 challenges you will be invited to the first Beta Test Tournament. The winner of the tournament will get a prize. If you are interested in being a release tester please e-mail the Guild 3 team at guild3@theguild3.com.

To further reduce the redundancy in the abundance matrix, we clustered the genomes into 18 guilds. The obtained results showed that the abundances of the representative genome in the same guild were highly correlated with each other (Fig. 5). This result was consistent with the expectation that, even after the reduction from genes to genomes and genomes to guilds, most of the abundances were still highly correlated, indicating that the obtained guilds should be composed of highly redundant organisms. In addition, we found that the abundance of a genome in a guild was positively correlated with the abundance of the representative genome in the guild. This was expected because, after the reduction from genes to genomes, the abundance of a genome in a guild was correlated with the abundance of the genome in the same guild. However, we also found that the abundance of a genome in a guild was negatively correlated with the abundance of the representative genome in the guild. PWS is a condition associated with childhood malnutrition caused by chronic, low-grade inflammation [41], which is influenced by gut microbiota [42]. In our study, we identified 10 guilds that were associated with at least one of the three disease phenotypes. Considering the property of “just-in-time”, these guilds may change their distribution and abundance accordingly to provide the most effective fitness to the host in the new environment. Thus, PWS is likely to be associated with each of the 10 guilds. Based on the long-lasting clinical studies of PWS, traditional culture-based methods demonstrate a significant decrease in fecal microbial diversity over time [43] and a shift in the composition of the microbiome [44]. Characterizing the association between microbiome composition and the clinical status of PWS may be helpful to identify the mechanistic role of the gut microbiota and lead to new treatments for PWS.
