There is considerable evidence to suggest that in order to attain an acceptable level of metabolic control in the management of diabetes mellitus, decisions concerning the timing of insulin therapy must be made on the basis of an assessment of the factors related to compliance and to the evaluation of long-term metabolic control. In this study, we evaluate the need for urgent corrective treatment in diabetic patients with severe metabolic impairment on the basis of a group of metabolic studies including measurements of blood glucose, non-esterified fatty acids, ketones, glycosylated hemoglobin, fructosamine, and hemoglobin A1. The total number of subjects included was 96 with an average age of 47.2 ± 11.7 . Twenty-eight of them had Type I diabetes mellitus and 68 had Type II, both being poorly controlled before starting the insulin therapy, with HbA1 and non-esterified fatty acid levels over the 5% of the total or the 95% of the upper reference value, respectively. After introduction of insulin therapy in 83 subjects (86%), control of the metabolic syndrome was achieved. Nineteen patients had hyperketonemia, 4 of these (21%) achieved a normal blood ketone level after 100 days of therapy. In 14 patients the blood ketone level was slightly elevated; moreover, in 10 of these (71%) the measurement of HbA1 was corrected after 3 months of treatment. The HbA1 level remained normal in 76 patients (80%) at the end of the study. In 31 patients (32%) the HbA1 level had not achieved normal values (greater than or equal to 6.5%) when the test was performed. In relation to the glycosylated hemoglobin, 27 patients showed a normal level at the beginning and normal values were obtained at the end of the study. In 17 patients (17%), a poor metabolic control of glycosylated hemoglobin was found at the beginning of the study (greater than or equal to 8.2%) and such level remained unchanged in all the cases after 3 months of treatment. Only 18 patients (19%) presented glycosylated hemoglobin levels greater than or equal to 9.0% at the end of the study. Twenty-five patients (26%) presented a higher fructosamine level than the upper normal value; in 9 of them (36%) the fructosamine value normalized after 3 months of treatment. In this study, we evaluated the metabolic control of 83 diabetic patients who received insulin for the first time and who had a poor metabolic control at the beginning of the study (HbA1 > 5%). After 3 months of treatment, the metabolic control of the sample was adequate in 86% of the patients. In 14% of them, the control of the metabolic abnormalities was still not achieved. Thirty-one percent of the patients presented hyperglycemia and 17% had ketosis. The HbA1 and fructosamine levels were corrected in the great majority of patients after 3 months of treatment. 5ec8ef588b
