GM Forge is not a tabletop product. It is a 3D modelling product. I recommend you check out the original World Anvil page if you'd like to see a few more examples of the types of things you can do with GM Forge. We haven't done much with the text editor yet, but I'll give you some of the basics of what a GM Forge article is as far as text goes. The basic idea is just that you're taking a picture of a thing, changing it by moving the camera around, or zooming in, and then rendering it as a basic image file which can be imported into World Anvil. You can make maps and movies with it! You can even make video tutorials for GM Forge, if you'd like. Some of the tools in the program are there to allow you to easily create 3D models as well as make them interactive. We will do an entire tutorial on how to design models in this program shortly, but for this, I'll list the essentials. World Anvil is part of the hobby of roleplaying games, and they feel pretty united in that. There's no place for tools and ideas which will hurt or help the community. So it will serve GM Forge fine to know that. They've accepted a lot of the groundwork with this program as laid by World Anvil and its community, and we don't want to help destroy their good work to try and taint it with our own. - James Murphy

Many people have an ideal of what they want to see in a tabletop RPG, it can be a very hard to imagine or a very crazy thing, but it's only a matter of time before we crack it. (They were right about Facebook). But what we can't achieve through gaming is quite amazing, and if we can't get there through the old-fashioned way of actually sitting around a table and making things up, then it might be time to consider the digital option.
