Delicious Retouch Panel 4.1.3

The Retouching Toolkit Makes my workflow a lot more efficient by removing the annoying basic and repetitive parts of my retouching process. It also takes out part of the human error I could induce in my editing - Im sure most of us have lost time at least a couple of times wondering why the healing layer had moved, or whats wrong with the settings we just used for frequency separation, etc. I have been working with this Retouching Toolkit for a while now and i still find it an indispensable tool, because it makes my workflow a lot more efficient by removing the annoying basic and repetitive parts of my retouching process. It also takes out part of the human error I could induce in my editing - Im sure most of us have lost time at least a couple of times wondering why the healing layer had moved, or whats wrong with the settings we just used for frequency separation, etc. I dont know why I have this kind of faith in plugins like this one. I mean its free and its not a rocket science; its an ordinary retouching toolkit which is really beneficial in terms of time. The best part about this plugin is that its a Photoshop tool. For photographers, its really amazing to see how a simple plugin can save time and even cut some of the costs associated with editing. So I am using this Retouching toolkit for quite some time now and its certainly made my photoshop editing process quite consistent and smooth. I mean, using a Photoshop tool like this is a no brainer. As far as editing goes, the only problem I see with this Retouching toolkit is its limit. But, its a free tool and the limit is not so high that you have to spend on buying Adobe Photoshop CS6. Im just sure its worth trying.

another thing that is great about the panel is that you can have the image settings saved for the particular layer, mask, frequency separation, etc. when you close the panel. this will allow you to get back to them with just a click. although this feature is great for saving time, it makes it a little more difficult to get to the exact settings you used in the first place. for example, when you close the panel you will have to go through all the layers and individually change the settings to the ones you used for that layer. this is why it would be better to have the settings saved for the whole image instead of each layer individually. if you have any questions about using the panel, feel free to contact us. a hidden tab in this panel called new is one of the most important tabs of the panel. this tab can be used to add new brush sets. you are free to add all the brush sets you want. but it is advised to add a default set to make editing your images easier. the default set is usually already included in the retouching toolkit. for the most part, you will have all the brushes available in the retouching toolkit to use. this is usually not a problem because you should be using the toolkit as your default toolkit anyway. the next tab, called presets is one of the most frequently used tabs of the panel. it is possible to create your own presets for each of the masking and retouching tools. this is a very advanced feature that is not always needed but when you do need it, its a godsend. if you dont know how to create a custom preset, you can always take a look at the video tutorials. but in the end, its just a matter of clicking the plus button and filling out a couple of fields. this will create the preset and you can use it when editing any image. you can also export them as a psd file if you like. 5ec8ef588b
