Take care not to overload your vehicle's wireless antenna with too many maps from a single source. You should always check the coverage areas for these updates and the integrity of the downloaded map data. You can get the latest map data from Maptime and Static , which provide network and cellular connections. Most updates are not available for all regions at once and will be added to the database according to the map that they support. Garmin requires even more space on your GPS because it downloads the map at a lower resolution than OpenStreetMap. For example, if you select 3.5, you will only be able to get very detailed maps in your area. In addition, you will need 4.0 MB of free space on the SD card for each map. Finally, you can buy additional cards on the Nissan website . The newest cardholder, released recently, is theNissanConnectimplementation, which supports a wide range of compatible GPS models, including those from other brands. It uses the same SD card as Maptime and Static and needs only 1.5 MB of free space. Some cards must be installed according to National cardholder requirements, i.e. Garmin cards . "The MyGps app", however, can automatically download updates to the correct card. Thus, you do not need to manually download and install the maps, and will be able to keep your navigation assistant up-to-date. Updates are usually stored on your SD card and can be updated at any time. It is very important that these updates are downloaded while the SD card is not in use. If you forget to do this, the vehicle's navigation assistant will not be able to download the map once it is in use. Some updates are not compatible with certain systems, and may not support all of your country's navigation assistants, as per the list below. This list should help you determine which card you need.
